Our website provides information on a range of conditions and topics.

Immunodeficiencies are a group of hundreds of different conditions affecting how the body's immune system fights infection.

Immunodeficiency disorders include those you are born with (primary), and those that are acquired (secondary).

People with immunodeficiency have parts of their immune system missing or not working correctly and so the individual has a reduced or no natural defence against germs, such as bacteria, fungi and viruses.

Any signs of ill health in a person with immunodeficiency need to be taken seriously, and infections need prompt and robust treatment with antibiotics.

Patients and medical professionals can access up-to-date information reviewed by an expert medical panel at www.immunodeficiencyuk.org.
